

Vacant property clearance and extreme cleaning

Background

Clearway was asked to attend a sequestration case for a valued client, to take vacant possession of a property in Edinburgh, which the marketing agent intended to photograph for resale purposes. Upon arrival we found that the site was in an extremely poor, uninhabitable condition, with evidence of years of extreme hoarding, and extensive amounts of waste, including bio waste and food waste in every room of the property.

Solution

The entire property had to have extensive clearance work and a deep clean. Clearway's specialist clearance teams were dispatched and meticulously removed all waste, including all furniture and floor coverings. Following the clearance, they performed an extensive deep clean of the property to restore it to a high standard.

CASE STUDY – Vacant Property Clearance and Extreme Cleaning

Outcome

Clearway's regional manager described the condition of the property as the worst he had seen in 33 years' working in the industry. However, with our specialist team carrying out an extensive property clearance and extreme clean-up, the property was effectively marketed and sold within a couple of months. The client was extremely grateful and highly satisfied with the results.
